PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case below, under case number 80-3932, is set out in the Appendix to this petition, along with the memorandum opinion by the Federal District Court, No. 76-0748. Additionally, the Court of Appeals granted the petitioner's motion for a stay of mandate, which order is also included in the Appendix.

JURISDICTION

The ruling of the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, was delivered on November 29, 1982. In that opinion, the Court of Appeals vacated a lower federal district court's denial of respondent's application for writ of habeas corpus and remanded the case to the lower court for further proceedings consistent with the Court of Appeals' opinion. The petitioner respectfully disagrees with the Court of Appeals' ruling and is now seeking this Honorable Court's review of the case by a writ of certiorari under the authority of 28 U.S.C. §1254 (1). According to 28 U.S.C. §2101 (c), the petitioner has ninety days after the Court of Appeals' decree of November 29, 1982 to file this petition.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

i) Course Of The Proceedings And Disposition In Court Below

The respondent herein, John Fulford, was arrested and indicted along with three co-defendants for a murder which occurred on April 10, 1971 at the Corso residence on the lakefront area of New Orleans. The trial of the case was moved to Lafayette, Louisiana, in order to assure the defendants fairness and impartiality. After a lengthy trial, the respondent, Fulford, as well as two co-defendants, Kirksey McCord Nix, Jr., and Peter Frank Mule, were convicted of murder. All three were sentenced to life imprisonment. A fourth person, James Knight, was the driver of the getaway car. Knight was originally indicted for the crime, but he was later granted immunity and testified at the trial against the three co-defendants.

After the respondent was convicted he made a direct appeal to the Louisiana Supreme Court in State v. Nix, et al., 327 So.2d 301 (La. 1975). The State Supreme Court affirmed all three of the convictions, including the respondent's conviction, after it carefully considered each of the 140 bills of exception raised by all three defendants.

The respondent next entered the federal court system as a habeas corpus petitioner. The respondent's habeas petition was filed in the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana under case number 76-0748. The respondent presented the district court with numerous claims of error, and after considering briefs by both parties, as well as the state court records and transcripts, the district court rejected all of respondent's claims and denied his application for writ of habeas corpus.

The respondent next appealed the district court's decision to the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, under case number 80-3932. After briefs and oral agrument were presented to the Fifth Circuit, that court rendered its opinion on November 29, 1982. In its opinion, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected all of the claims presented by the respondent, except one. The claim presented by Fulford was that his conviction was obtained unconstitutionally because the state trial court denied a defense motion to appoint a sanity commission to determine whether respondent was competent to assist his counsel and stand trial. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the federal district court's dismissal of that claim and remanded the case to the district court "for a determination of whether an adequate nunc pro tunc inquiry can be held regarding Fulford's competency in 1972." Fulford v. Maggio, __ F.2d __ (5th Cir. November 29, 1982). Petitioner respectfully objects to the above ruling and now comes to this Honorable Court with a petition for a writ of certiorari to review and reverse the Court of Appeals' ruling.

ii) Statement of Facts

During the late night and early morning of April 10-11, 1971, three armed men forcibly entered the home of Frank Corso, with the apparent intention of committing a burglary. The house was occupied at the time by Mr. Corso, his wife and their three children. Mrs. Corso heard the three men and discovered them during the last stages of forcing the rear door open with a hydraulic jack. She immediately ran down the hall screaming for her husband to help.

Frank Corso was asleep at the time. When he heard his wife's screams, he grabbed a .32 calibre pistol which he kept in the house and confronted the burglars. The three men started firing their weapons and a gunfight ensued. During the gunfight Frank Corso was fatally wounded, and apparently one of the gunmen was also shot. As the men fled from the residence, Mrs. Corso retrieved her husband's weapon and chased the intruders, shooting at them several times. In the sudden escape, the burglars forgot their tools at the door. As the men ran down the street, the wounded one was assisted by one of the other men.

Following a police investigation, John Fulford, the respondent herein, Kirksey McCord Nix, Jr., Peter Frank Mule, and a fourth man named James Knight were all arrested for the murder of Mr. Corso. All were indicted for murder by the Orleans Parish Grand Jury. Knight, the driver of the getaway car, was severed from the others and granted immunity in return for his testimony. Following a change of venue to Lafayette Parish, the other three were jointly tried and found guilty without capital punishment. Thereafter, the three were sentenced to life imprisonment.

There are certain other facts that are relevant to this petition that occurred during the progress of the case through court. On March 1, 1972, the morning respondent's trial was to begin, counsel for respondent filed a motion to appoint a sanity commission for the purpose of deciding whether the respondent was competent to assist his counsel in his defense. A hearing was held that morning where respondent presented one witness, a psychiatrist, who had briefly examined the respondent the day before. After the testimony of the respondent's witness and arguments by both sides, the state trial court made a finding of fact that the respondent was competent to stand trial and therefore it denied the motion. (State Record Vol. 4, pp. 931-953). It is this motion, the subsequent hearing and court ruling that form the core of the issue in question.*

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

THE FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS ERRED WHEN IT REVERSED THE DISTRICT COURT'S DECISION BECAUSE THE DISTRICT COURT'S DECISION WAS BASED ON A SPECIFIC FINDING OF FACT MADE BY THE STATE TRIAL COURT. THAT FINDING OF FACT HAS A PRESUMPTION OF CORRECTNESS WHEN VIEWED BY A FEDERAL COURT ON A HABEAS APPLICATION. THE

* The motion to appoint a sanity commission, as well as all the relevant transcripts and findings of fact by the state trial court can be found in the state court record. The complete record is twenty-four volumes in length and it is presently in the custody of the Clerk of Court for the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, under case number 80-3932.

DISTRICT COURT FOLLOWED THAT PRESUMPTION BUT THE COURT OF APPEALS DID NOT. THE FIFTH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS' FAILURE TO FOLLOW THE PRESUMPTION OF CORRECTNESS OF THE STATE COURT'S FINDING OF FACT WAS NOT BASED ON ANY OF THE SPECIFIC EXCEPTIONS SET OUT IN 28 U.S.C. §2254 (d). THEREFORE THE COURT OF APPEALS' REVERSAL WAS IMPROPER.

II

ALSO, THE PETITIONER SUBMITS THAT CONSIDERING THE EVIDENCE THAT WAS PRESENTED TO THE STATE TRIAL COURT AT THE TIME THE RESPONDENT ASSERTED HIS NEED FOR A COMPETENCY HEARING, THE RESPONDENT FAILED TO DEMONSTRATE THAT THERE WAS A REAL, SUBSTANTIAL AND LEGITIMATE DOUBT AS TO THE MENTAL CAPACITY OF RESPONDENT TO MEANINGFULLY PARTICIPATE AND COOPERATE WITH HIS COUNSEL. THE PETITIONER SUBMITS THAT THE COURT OF APPEALS INCORRECTLY APPLIED THAT STANDARD TO THE FACTS AND EVIDENCE IN THE STATE TRIAL COURT'S POSSESSION AND THEREFORE ITS DECISION TO REMAND THE CASE TO THE DISTRICT COURT SHOULD BE REVERSED.

ARGUMENT

On the day before the trial was to begin, counsel for respondent filed a motion for the appointment of a sanity commission to examine the respondent and determine whether he was competent to assist counsel in his defense. The standard by which the state trial court was to decide on Fulford's competency was set out in the following statute and cases:

> "The trial court may, in the exercise of its sound discretion, order a mental examination of the defendant when it has reasonable grounds to doubt the defendant's mental capacity to proceed. La.Code Crim. Pro. art. 643.

According to the Louisiana Supreme Court, the decision of the trial court on this issue would not be reversed unless there is a strong showing of a clear abuse of the trial court's discretion. State v. Luquette, 275 So.2d 396 (1973). The appointment of a lunacy commission is not a prefunctory matter or a ministerial duty of the trial court, nor is it guaranteed to every accused in every case. State v. Graves, 174 So.2d 118 (1965). Against this statutory and jurisprudential background the trial court was presented the following evidence on the issue of Fulford's competency:

Respondent presented Dr. William McCray, a psychiatrist, who had examilned Fulford in his cell the previous day for about fifty minutes. Doctor McCray found Fulford to be well oriented as to time, place and person and he seemed cognizant of physical facts of what was going on around him. Nevertheless Doctor McCray concluded that Fulford had paranoid delusions which kept him from adequately assisting in his own defense. The only source of Doctor McCray's information was from respondent's own statements. The doctor related the following account of his interview with Fulford at the hearing: (State Record, Vol. 4, pp. 942-943)

> He spoke with me at great length about his—his —well, concerns or his beliefs that everyone connected with him in the case was against him and attempting to keep him from—from going to trial and attempting to prevent him from proving his innocence.
> Because of this, he stated that he was withholding names of witnesses, that he felt could prove his innocence because if he revealed these names that they would be arrested and held in jail and kept from testifying for him. He felt that not only his attorneys but that the judge was against him and in league to keep him from his day in court, that the illness—the recent illness of the judge was not an illness at all but just another ploy to—too keep him out of court. As a result of—of this meeting with him, it was my preliminary opinion that the—that Mr. Fulford had paranoid delusions which kept him from adequately assisting in his own defense.

After the above testimony, both sides submitted oral argument and the trial judge denied the motion. In two per curiam opinions the trial court set out its findings of fact on the issue of whether to appoint a sanity commission to examine Fulford further: (Per Curiam no. 29, State Record, Vol. 4, pp. 952-953)

> "I was satisfied that this defendant was oriented as to time, date and place and was cognizant of everything around him. It appeared to me that this was just a subterfuge on the part of this defendant to attempt to keep from going to trial so that he would be tried at a different time from the other defendants. Subsequent happenings during the trial and after the trial have thoroughly convinced me that my ruling at the time of his hearing was correct.

> "...I might add that upon resentencing of this defendant in Lafayette, Louisiana during the first part of January, 1974, when he requested that I relieve his court appointed attorney and allow him to represent himself, I raise(d) the question of his mental capacity and pointed out to him this motion of which I am now speaking. He stated to me emphatically that he was of sound mind and that he did not need a lawyer and that he would have me reversed." (Emphasis added).

Also, it is important to note that just two days after counsel contended that Fulford was not competent to assist him, Fulford made the following motion, on his own, to the court: (State Record, Vol 5, pp. 526-527)

> THIS COURT:
>
> All right, Mr. Fulford, you wish to state something now sir?
> MR. FULFORD:
>
> Yes, sir, I do. Am I going to be allowed to assist in my defense, or may I defend myself?
>
> THIS COURT:
>
> You will be allowed to assist your counsel in your defense, yes, sir.
>
> Could it be that the counsel could assist me?
>
> THIS COURT:
> They are the—

MR. FULFORD:

I would elect to defend myself.

THIS COURT:

I have denied that request, sir.

MR. FULFORD:

Could I deny—could I defend myself with the assistance of counsel?

THIS COURT:

They will do the assisting and you can assist your counsel in your defense.

MR. FULFORD:

That is not what the Constitution says, Your Honor.

THIS COURT:

Well, —

MR. FULFORD:

It says that I'm entitled to the assistance of counsel. I can defend myself, and that is the point I'd like to get across.

THIS COURT:

Well, I'm going to allow—

MR. FULFORD:

May I do that?

THIS COURT:

—you to assist your counsel in your defense, Mr. Fulford. And the Court's ruled.

MR. FULFORD:

I'm—I'm going to take a bill to that—to that ruling, too, Your Honor. (Emphasis added).

Finally, in a related per curiam, the trial court made the following findings of fact: (Per Curiam, no. 42, State Record, Vol. 5, pp. 1024, 1025)

"I might further add, contrary to what the doctor testified at the hearing to determine whether Mr. Fulford was unable to assist counsel in his defense, that the alleged eyewitnesses, which Mr. Fulford stated would prove his innocence, were called and did testify as to his alleged alibi. Throughout the entire trial Mr. Fulford was accorded a complete and full defense and I saw nothing from the beginning of the trial to the end that in any way detracted from any of Mr. Fulford's rights. I hesitate to state but I do feel that this was a plan designed by Mr. Fulford to try to disrupt his trial and to prevent him from being tried with his co-defendants.

"Subsequent to this point in the trial and the numerous motions filed by Mr. Fulford, individually, and including his statements in open court when he was sentenced in Lafayette, Louisiana, in January, 1974, that he was well able to defend himself and that he was going to get me reversed, I am now thoroughly convinced that the lunacy hearing and the motion to sever were purely attempts to try to delay the trial or prevent Mr. Fulford from being tried at that time."

To corroborate the trial court's finding of fact that, in contradiction of what the respondent told the doctor about his fear of calling witnesses, Fulford called two alibi witnesses who testified in his behalf that he was in Gulfport, Mississippi at the time of the murder. (State Record, Vol. 22, pp. 2393-2405). Contrary to what Fulford claims in his brief and to what the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals stated in its opinion, there is nothing in the record to indicate that these two alibi witnesses were contacted by anyone other than Fulford himself. The trial court was able to observe the respondent during all of the pretrial motions, and during those personal observations, the court was much better the judge of whether Fulford was cognizant of what was going on in court, than the federal court of appeals who looked at an inanimate record years later.

After reading the same record as the federal court of appeals would read, the Louisiana Supreme Court dismissed this claim by making its own finding that the respondent was competent to stand trial and the trial court was correct in its denial of the motion. At page 324, the Louisiana Supreme Court stated: (State v. Nix, et al, 327 So.2d 301 (1975)).

> "The judge's findings are amply supported by the record. Mr. Fulford told Doctor McCray on February 29, 1972, that he could not trust his attorneys and would not divulge the names of his alibi witnesses. On Thursday, March 9, 1972, the alleged alibi witnesses were in court testifying on Mr. Fulford's behalf. Thus it is clear that Mr. Fulford did not withhold the names of his witnesses, and was able to assist his counsel in the preparation and conduct of his defense...
> "...In view of the ability of the trial court to observe Mr. Fulford at length during the preliminary hearings and the trial of this case, coupled with the limited time Doctor McCray spent in formulating his opinion as to Mr. Fulford's mental condition, we cannot say the trial court abused its considerable discretion in refusing to appoint a lunacy commission to evaluate John Fulford."

The decision of whether any defendant is competent to stand trial and assist counsel is always ultimately with the trial court. Regardless what an examining physician may conclude, it is the trial court's responsibility to make a judgment about the defendant's ability to stand trial. The making of that decision may be assisted by the opinions of doctors who examine the defendant, and of course the trial court should rely on its observations of the defendant which, in a case of this magnitude, were numerous.

In making the decision in this case, the trial court compared all of its observations of the respondent with the testimony of the doctor, which was mostly just a recitation of the self-serving statements made to the doctor by Fulford. As displayed earlier in this petition, the record in this case contains ample evidence which was used by the trial court in making its findings of fact and the trial court's finding is fairly supported by the record.

28 U.S.C. §2254 (d) states:

"(d) in any proceeding instituted in a Federal court by an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court, a determination after a hearing on the merits of a factual issue, made by a State court of competent jurisdiction in a proceeding to which the applicant for the writ and the State or an officer or agent thereof were > parties, evidenced by a written finding, shall be presumed to be correct..."

This Honorable Court in Sumner v. Mata, __ U.S. __, 102 S.Ct. 1303 (1982), stated when construing this statute, "we deal here a statute that requires the federal courts to show a high measure of deference to the fact findings made by the state courts." (at page 1207).

In examining the reasons for the trial court's decision to deny the respondent's motion for a sanity commission, the petitioner submits that the record more than fairly supports that decision. When the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals made its contrary decision, it not only disregarded the trial court's finding of fact, as well as the Louisiana Supreme Court's separate consistent finding of fact, but it did not give the evidence presented here, which was the basis of the trial court's decision, the deference that this Honorable Court has required a federal court to give when it is reviewing a state conviction on a habeas application. Because the federal court of appeals did not give the state trial court's decision and the supporting evidence which is present in the record, the deference it should be given, and because the record fairly supports the trial court's ruling, petitioner submits that the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals' ruling to remand the case was incorrect. Therefore, the petitioner urges this Honorable Court to vacate that ruling and reinstate the federal district court's denial of respondents habeas application.

II

The second argument by petitioner concerns the issue of respondent's mental competency itself during the time in question. The test that applies to this question was set forth in Pedrereo v. Wainwright, 590 F.2d 1383 (5th Cir. 1979), where that court stated that, a habeas petitioner who contends > "that he was entitled to a competency hearing must show that there were matters known to the trial court that raised at that time a 'real, substantial and legitimate doubt as to the mental capacity of the petitioner to meaningfully particiapte and cooperate with counsel.' " (At page 1388, citing Bruce v. Estelle, 483 F.2d 1031 (5th Cir. 1973).

The petitioner submits that when the evidence presented to the trial court by the respondent is compared with the trial court's own observations of respondent, together with all the other attempts of respondent to avoid trial, it shows that there was not a "real, substantial and legitimate doubt" as to respondent's competency. The trial court was not bound to agree with the examining doctor's conclusions about respondent's condition. These conclusions were, as the doctor candidly admitted, really nothing more than his repeating the self-serving statement made by respondent at their short meeting. The court was fairly comparing its own observations of respondent during the course of the pretrial proceedings, with the scenario that respondent related to the doctor, which was reasonably calculated by respondent to make the doctor think that respondent was incompetent to proceed with the case. Based on this comparison, the trial court concluded that respondent was merely attempting to delay his trial and void being tried jointly with his con-defendants.

The decision by the trial court was a considered one which was based entirely upon the court's actual observations of the witness, the respondent and the respondent's attempts to sabotage the prosecution. The trial court correctly concluded that there was no real, substantial or legitimate doubt about Fulford's competency at the time he stood trial. The trial court's conclusion was, in effect, a ruling on the respondent's competency after a hearing on the issue. The totality of the evidence supports the trial court's conclusion that there was no "real, substantial or legitimate doubt" concerning the respondent's capacity to assist his counsel. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals' ruling on this issue was incorrect, and the petitioner urges this Court to reverse that court's ruling and affirm the district court's denial of respondent's writ of habeas corpus.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing arguments and jurisprudence, petitioner respectfully asks this Honorable Court to reverse the decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in this case, and reinstate the district court's denial of respondent's writ of habeas corpus.

APPENDIX "A"

United States Court of Appeals Opinion

John FULFORD, Petitioner-Appellant,

v.

Ross MAGGIO, Jr.,
Warden, Louisiana State Penitentiary,
Respondent-Appellee.

No. 80-3932.

United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit

Nov. 29, 1982.

Louisiana prisoner sought federal habeas corpus. The United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana, W. Eugene Davis, J., denied relief, and petitioner appealed. The Court of Appeals, Gee, Circuit judge, held that (1) petitioner suffered no substantial prejudice from Brady violation; (2) petitioner was not denied effective assistance of counsel; (3) denial of motion to proceed pro se was not abuse of discretion; and (4) where qualified psychiatrist's opinion that petitioner had paranoid delusions which rendered him incompetent to stand trail was uncontradicted and he recommended further examination, the state court committed constitutional error in not conducting further competency proceedings.

Vacated and remanded.

1. Constitutional Law 268(5)

Suppression of material evidence which is both requested by and favorable to the defense is a violation of due process irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

2. Criminal Law 627.5(1)

Guiding principle of Brady, which governs suppression of favorable material evidence on request by the defense is that a jury should be permitted to hear and evaluate all relevant evidence going to guilt or punishment and, to this end, it does not establish a constitutional right to discovery. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14.

3. Criminal Law 1166(1)

Prosecution's failure to produce, on discovery request, a police report on teletype relating to murder and third-party confession was not reversible error as no exculpatory fact could be discerned from teletype message, which described two suspects who differed in appearance from defendant but were similar to codefendant and stated that a third, undescribed suspect was also wanted for questioning; there was no indication that there was any source other than defense witness for information in teletype regarding vehicle being driven by suspects, and introduction of the confession would not have affected the outcome.

4. Criminal Law 627.5(1)

State's duty of disclosure of Brady material, i.e., requested exculpatory matter, is imposed not only on the prosecutor but also on the state as a whole, including its investigative agencies and, hence, if allegedly suppressed confessions were held by police department the court would be compelled to conclude that, constructively, the state's attorney had both access to and control over those documents. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

5. Jury 33(1.3)

Evidence of racial composition of petit jury venire is a threshold requirement for comparing percentage of blacks on the venire with the percentage of blacks in the community at large, for purpose of showing that jury venire was unconstitutionally selected on grounds that blacks were exclusded. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

6. Criminnal Law 1171.1(2)

To establish that a prosecutor's remarks were so inflammatory as to prejudice substantial rights of a defendant, the defense must demonstrate either persistent and pronounced misconduct or that the evidence was so insubstantial that in probability but for the remarks no conviction would have occurred.

7. Criminal Law 641.13(2)

Prosecutor's insinuation that defendant would not have been arrested were he not guilty and reference to defense expert witness as "Dr. Strangelove" were regrettable but did not rise to stature of constitutional error so as to warrant finding of ineffective counsel for failure to object. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 6, 14.

8. Constitutional Law 268.2(2)

Due process is denied an incompetent criminal defendant who is required to stand trial. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

9. Habeas Corpus 90

Absent a violation of constitutional rights, a federal habeas court must defer to a state court's fact-finding.

10. Criminal Law 625

Where qualified psychiatrist's testimony that, although defendant appeared to be well-oriented to time, place and person, he had paranoid delusions which rendered him incompetent to stand trail was unchallenged and psychiatrist recommended that, because of brevity of his examination, further evaluation was needed, the state court committed constitutional error in not conducting further competency proceedings, especially in view of lack of record support for reasons given for denying a competency hearing. LSA—C.Cr.P. art. 644; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

11. Criminal Law 625

Where an accused establishes a prima facie case of incompetency through the introduction of expert testimony, it is incumbent on the trial court to delineate expressly its reasons for rejecting such testimony and such rejection must be supported by the record.

12. Criminal Law 641.4(1)

Once trial begins the right to defend in the proper person ceases to be absolute and at that point it is within the trial court's discretion whether to permit the accused to proceed pro se and in reaching its decision the trial court must balance whatever prejudice is alleged by the defense against such factors as disruption of the proceedings, inconvenience and delay, and possible confusion of the jury.

13. Criminal Law 1152(1)

Denial of a motion to proceed pro se, made after trial has begun, will be reviewed only for abuse of discretion.

14. Criminal Law 641.4(1)

Denial of motion to proceed pro se was not abuse of discretion where motion was made on date of trial and on the privious day defendant had requested a competency hearing.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Louisiana.

Before BROWN, GEE and GARWOOD, Circuit Judges.

GEE, Circuit Judge:

INTRODUCTION

After a jury trial in the District Court for the Fifteenth Judicial District of LaFayette Parish, Louisiana, petitioner, John Fulford, was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. His conviction was affirmed on appeal by the Louisiana Supreme Court, Louisiana v. Nix, 327 So.2d 301 (La. 1975), and certain related issues were considered by this court in a decision, Fulford v. Klein, reported at 550 F.2d 342 (5th Cir. 1977) (en banc). Here, Fulford advances thirteen issues disputing the district court's denial of his habeas petition. Some raise purely state concerns or are obviously meritless and therefore not deserving of extensive discussion. Others involve potentially problematic aspects of constitutional law and require detailed analysis.

The facts of the present action are well stated in Louisiana v. Nix, 327 so.2d 301 (La.1975). The following summation is offered as a guide to the reader. Frank Corso was shot and killed in an apparent burglary attempt on his home in 1971. After a celebrated murder trial, Fulford and his codefendants, Kirksey Nix and Peter Mule, were sentenced to life imprisonment. Their appeal to the Louisiana Supreme Court presented over 100 "bills of exceptions." All were denied. By this time, Fulford was proceeding primarily pro se. In 1976 Fulford entered the federal system as a habeas petitioner. Because of exhaustion requirements and other delays, the district court did not issue an order in the case until late 1980. Now, over ten years after his trial, we consider the constitutionality of Fulford's conviction.

I. Suppression of Evidence.

[1] Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S.Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963), enunciates the general rule that suppression of material evidence, which is both requested by and favorable to the defense, is a violation of due process irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution. 373 U.S. at 87, 83 S.Ct. at 1196. Against this background, Fulford first contends that the prosecution's failure to produce (1) a police report and teletype relating to the murder and (2) the confession of Donald Eugene Smith[1] is a per se violation of his constitutional guarantees. This argument misreads the primary admonition of Brady.

[2] The guiding principle of Brady is that a jury should be permitted to hear and evaluate all relevant evidence going to a defendant's guilt or punishment. Id. To this end, it does not establish a constitutional right to discovery. Wetherford v. Bursey, 429 U.S. 545, 559, 97 S.Ct. 837, 845, 51 L.Ed.2d 30 (1977). Rather, Brady requires the prosecution to make available to the defense all

[1] Donald Eugene Smith, an inmate at the federal penitentiaary in Marion, Illinois, actually made two confessions to the present crime. The first confession is in the form of an affidavit dated December 4, 1971, in which Smith avers that he was in the custody of Jefferson Parish officials on April 28, 1971, and that he had attempted to confess "to the armed robbery and murder that occurred April 11, 1971, at the home of the old man who was killed." Smith claims that he committed the crime with one accomplice and that the two separated after the killing. Reference is again made to "the old man in the New Orleans home robbery," but Corso is not identified by name. The second confession is more conventional, naming an accomplice and specifying the victim. Smith contends that he and one Mike Famiglitti met in New Orleans on April 10, 1971, conspired at Famiglitti's girl friend's home in Gretna, and went to the Corso home the next night in a 1967 blue Mustang. According to Smith, the object of the robbery was $24,000 in cash and five kilos of heroin hidden in Mr. Corso's bowling ball bag. This affidavit is dated June 22, 1973.

It is clear that the prosecution could not have withheld the second Smith confession since it was apparently executed some 15 months after Fulford's trial. The first confession was apparently mailed to Jefferson Parish officials, but it is unclear whether it reached the office of the Orleans officials. Even assuming that the prosecution had received this statement before trial, there is little to connect Smith's confession to the Corso killing other than the reference to the murder of an old man in a New Orleans home.

requested exculpatory evidence in its possession. In the event requested evidence is not disclosed, Brady next requires a determination of whether the prosecution's actions or omissions resulted in substantial prejudice to an accused's defense. United States v. Felts, 497 F.2d 80, 82 (5th Cir. 1974) (per curiam); United States v. Watson, 669 F.2d 1374 (11th Cir. 1982) (rev'd on other grounds). As we note below, we are deeply troubled by elements of this claim, however, we do not find the prejudice necessary to warrant reversal.

It is undisputed that in response to a pretrial Brady request the prosecution stated that it held no evidence which the defense might find favorable. Through the good offices of an "insider" at the New Orleans police department, Fulford obtained the evidence that lies at the basis of the present claim. When the fact of this evidence was presented to the prosecution at trial, it again denied the existence of any exculpatory evidence within its files and stated that the police department also had no evidence to offer. The trial record reveals that this was at best an erroneous statement.

[3,4] While we find the turn of events rather suspicious, under the present circumstances Fulford suffered no substantial prejudice. Whatever its source, the disputed police report was used by the defense at trial for purposes of impeachment although it was not admitted into evidence. This report apparently stated that Mrs. Corso had told investigating officers that two men had broken into her home an shot her husband. Further, neither of the men described within the report matched Fulford's appearance. We note, without holding, that the report was in all probability wrongfully withheld by the prosecution. However, because the jury was able to hear and evaluate the exculpatory information contained in the report we do not find reversible error.

Similarly, we find that the information contained in the teletype would be cumulative evidence at best and would not have contributed to a differing jury verdict. See United States v. Benton, 637 F.2d 1052 (5th Cir. 1981). The teletype message described two suspects who differed in appearance from Fulford, but were similar to his codefendants. However, the teletype also stated that a third, undescribed suspect was also wanted for questioning. We fail to discern the exculpatory effect of such a message.

In addition, the message stated that the suspects were driving a blue Mustang. At trial, Fulford's accomplice, James Knight, who was granted immunity in return for his testimony, stated that he drove a green Oldsmobile to and from the crime. Balanced against this was the testimony of one of the defendants' witnesses, Mr. Dittman, to the effect that he had seen a blue Mustang leaving the vicinity of the crime and that he had reported this to the police. Nothing in the record indicates that there was any source, other than Mr. Dittman, for the information in the teletype regarding the Mustang. Since the jury had an opportunity to evaluate the inconsistencies in the prosecution's case we do not find reversible error.

Although our ultimate conclusion must stand, our approach to the confession is a different matter.[2] Donald

[2] The State's duty of disclosure is imposed not only upon its prosecutor, but also on the State as a whole, including its investigative agencies. Therefore, if the confessions were held by the New Orleans police department we would be compelled to conclude that, constructively, the State's attorney had both access to and control over these documents. See, United States v. bryant, 142 D.C.App. 132, 439 F.2d 642, on remand, 331 F.Supp. 927, aff's, 145 D.C.App. 259, 448 F.2d 1182 (1971); United States v. Jensen, 608 F.2d 1349 (10th Cir.1979).

Smith confessed "to the armed robbery and murder, that occurred April 11th, 1971 at the home of the old man, who was killed" in New Orleans. Smith also claimed that he was the perpetrator of a number of robberies in other states and also attempted to exonerate two of his codefendants who were convicted of yet another robbery. Our reading of the record does not disclose whether this document was actually in the possession of the New Orleans police department. See note 1, supra. However, such a finding is not necessary to our conclusion. The totality of the evidence requires us to find that the introduction of Smith's confession would not have affected the outcome of Fulford's trial. Accordingly, any error would be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. See Clark v. Blackburn, 632 F.2d 531 (5th Cir. 1980); United States v. Lay, 644 F.2d 1087 (5th Cir. 1981); Wiggins v. Estelle, 681 F.2d 266 (5th Cir.1982).

Two eyewitnesses identified Fulford as one of the perpetrators of the murder. An accomplice, turned government witness, placed him at the scene of the crime. His girlfriend implicated him in the events of that night. In sum the evidence was overwhelming. While the defense presented evidence to contradict the government's case, including alibi witnesses and a witness who strongly suggested that her lover had committed the crime, the jury obviously chose to believe that Fulford was guilty. We do not believe nor can we hold that a vague confession of a convicted felon would have overcome the prosecution's case. Were the evidence less substantial, the interests of justice would require a more complete explanation and inquiry into whether Smith's confession was actually of the New Orleans police department and by implication the prosecution. See notes 1 and 2, supra.

II. The Jury Venire.

[5] Fulford's next contention is that the jury venire was unconstitutionally selected because blacks were excluded under the same selection process held to be unconstitutional in Alexander v. Louisiana, 405 U.S. 625, 92 S.Ct. 1221, 31 L.Ed.2d 536 (1972). Alexander held that Louisiana's method for selecting veniremen was not racially neutral[3] and therefore presumptively violative of a black defendant's rights under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment where no blacks served on that defendant's jury. 405 U.S. at 632, 92 S.Ct. at 1226. It is arguable that Fulford does not have the requisite standing to press such a claim,[4] however, on the present facts we need not reach this issue. Fulford has not submitted evidence to establish the racial composition of the petit jury venire, a threshold requirement for comparing the percentage of blacks on the venire with the per-

[3] The Louisiana system required prospective jurors to complete an information form which requested their race. Against this background the Court held that the petitioner made out a prima facie case of invidious discrimination in the selection of the grand jury that indicted him because the State could not adequately justify the disproportionately low number of blacks that served on juries as opposed to the percentage of blacks in the community at large. 405 U.S. at 631-632, 92 S.Ct. at 1225-1226.

[4] Facially, Alexander holds that the constitutional rights of a racially identifiable minority are presumptively violated under certain circumstances. It may be that the Court's decision in Peters v. Kiff, 407 U.S. 493, 92 S.Ct. 2163, 33 L.Ed.2d 83 (1972), where it held that deprivation of a jury that does not represent a cross section of the community is violative of an accused's constitutional rights, permits Fulford to bring suit in accordance with Alexander, however, we have not and need not today define the precise interrelationship of these cases. Nor, in view of our disposition, need we consider the application here of our decision in Watson v. United States, 484 F.2d 34 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 940, 94 S.Ct. 1944, 40 L.Ed.2d 291 (1974), that the principles enunciated in Peters had no retroactive application.

centage of blacks in the community at large. 405 U.S. at 630, 92 S.Ct. at 1225. Moreover, Fulford has not demonstrated that the selection process used in 1968 when Alexander was tried was still in effect four years later. In consequence, this argument presents no ground for habeas relief.

III. Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.

Fulford next raises the customary ineffective assistance of counsel claim. To this end he lists a number of "failures" on the part of his counsel, Wayne Mancuso. We note at the outset that within this circuit "[w]e interpret the right to counsel as the right to effective counsel. We interpret counsel to mean not errorless counsel, and not counsel judged ineffective by hindsight, but counsel reasonably likely to render and rendering effective assistance." Mackenna v. Ellis, 280 F.2d 592, 599 (5th Cir.1960) (emphasis original), adopted on rehearing en banc, 289 F.2d 928 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 368 U.S. 877, 82 S.Ct. 121, 7 L.Ed.2d 78 (1961). Against this standard, our review of the record reveals Fulford's claim to be without merit.

[6,7] Mancuso and his co-counsel Roehm West, preserved and presented over 100 points of error to the Louisiana Supreme Court. They effectively cross-examined witnesses and, in the face of eyewitness testimony, constructed a plausible defense theory. In light of our reading of the record we are not compelled to review each of Fulford's individual allegations of ineffective assistance. We must, however, address his assertion that Mancuso became so emotional after his final argument that he left the courtroom because in connection with this alleged event, and as a separate ground for reversal, Fulford contends that the prosecution made prejudicial remarks during its rebuttal argument, remarks that went unchallenged owing to Mancuso's absence and resulted in substantial prejudice to his defense. The record reflects that the prosecution both insinuated that Fulford would not have been arrested were he not guilty and referred to the defense's expert witness as "Dr. Strangelove."

It is beyond peradventure that in federal habeas corpus actions, "[i]mproper jury argument by the prosecution does not present a claim of constitutional magnitude ... unless such argument is so prejudicial that the applicant's state court trial was rendered fundamentally unfair within the meaning of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." Bronstein v. Wainwright, 646 F.2d 1048, 1056 (5th Cir. 1981), quoting, Alvarez v. Estelle, 531 F.2d 1319, 1323 (5th Cir.1976). To establish that a prosecutor's remarks are so inflammatory as to prejudice the substantial rights of a defendant, the defense must demonstrate either persistent and pronounced misconduct or that the evidence was so insubstantial that (in probability) but for the remarks no conviction would have occurred. Getchell v. United States, 282 F.2d 681 (5th Cir.1960) (persistent misconduct and inflamatory statements reversible error); United States v. Carrillo, 565 F.2d 1323 (5th Cir.1978) (characterization of defendant as narcotics addict not reversible error); United States v. Hughes, 658 F.2d 317, 323 (5th Cir.1981) (prosecutor's remark that defendant looked like a drug dealer not reversible in light of substantial evidence).

As we noted above, the evidence against Fulford was substantial—if not overwhelming. While we might condemn the prosecutor's intemperate remarks on direct review, in light of the evidence we do not believe that they deprived Fulford of a fundamentally fair trial. Moreover, considering the length of the trial and that it was highly publicized and emotional, counsel for both sides maintained admirable decorum. The prosecution's remarks at the end of such a hotly contested proceeding are regrettable. However, they do not rise to the stature of constitutional error.

Our analysis indicated that Fulford has presented neither evidence that Mancuso was absent during the prosecution's rebuttal argument nor sufficient ground to warrant a finding of ineffective assistance of counsel if he was absent. After Mancuso's closing argument, the court took a five-minute recess. When proceedings resumed, and immediately prior to the prosecution's rebuttal, the record reveals that Mancuso waived polling the jury. This suggests that Mancuso was present during the rebuttal, however we do not rest our conclusion on the probability that he did not absent himself. The record reflects that West, Fulford's other lawyer, played an active role in his defense and was present during the rebuttal argument. Why he did not object to the prosecution's statements is a matter of conjecture. It is possible that counsel concluded that an objection would underscore the prosecution's argument. In any event, we will not impose our conceptions of trial tactics, developed with the aid of hindsight and reflection, where a defendant's counsel has presented a vigorous and well reasoned defense. Beckham v. Wainwright, 639 F.2d 262 (5th Cir.1981).

IV. Competency Hearing

Fulford next alleges that his conviction was obtained unconstitutionally because the trial court denied a defense motion to impanel a sanity commission.[5] Specifically, the petitioner argues that the medical testimony of Dr. McCray was unrebutted, and that the district judge abused his discretion by refusing to establish the commission.

[8] It is clear that due process is denied to an incompetent criminal defendant who is required to stand trial. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 86 S.Ct. 836, 15 L.Ed.2d 815 (1966). A habeas petitioner who contends that he was entitled to a competency hearing must demonstrate that the trial court was aware of matters which raised at that time a "real, substantial and legitimate doubt as to the mental capacity of the petitioner to meaningfully participate and cooperate with counsel." Bruce v. Estelle, 483 F.2d 1031, 1043 (5th Cir.1973); Pedrero v. Wainwright, 590 F.2d 1383 (5th Cir.1979).

Here, appellant offered the testimony of Dr. William McCray, a qualified psychiatrist, who examined Fulford in his cell for about 50 minutes on the day before trial. Dr McCray noted that an evaluation usually requires several sessions as well as a supporting evaluation from a clinical psychologist. Finding Fulford to be well oriented to time, place and person, Dr. McCray nevertheless testified that Fulford had paranoid delusions which rendered him incompetent to stand trial. Specifically, Fulford had told Dr. McCray that he was withholding the names of alibi witnesses who could prove his innocence for fear that they would be arrested and prevented from testifying in his behalf.

In its per curiam giving reasons for denying the motion, the trial court noted that Fulford "was oriented as to time, date and place and was cognizant of everything around him." The court further stated that it considered the motion a subterfuge on Fulford's part to effect a severance from his codefendants. Moreover, the court noted that the defendant called alibi witnesses who testified in his behalf. On appeal the Louisiana Supreme Court relied heavily on the trial court's observations of Fulford at the preliminary hearing and trial in holding that "[t]he judge's findings [were] amply supported by the record." 327 So.2d at 324. We do not agree.

[5] La.Code Crim.Pro.Ann. Art. 644 empowers the trial court to appoint a commission of at least two qualified physicians to "examine and report upon the mental condition of a defendant."

[9] We are mindful that we are a federal court reviewing a state court conviction. In consequence, absent a violation of an accused's constitutional rights, we must defer to the state court's findings of fact. See Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 95 S.Ct. 896, 43 L.Ed.2d 103 (1975); Summer v. Mata, 449l U.S. 539, 101 S.Ct. 764, 66 L.Ed.2d 722 (1981). Here, we cannot defer.

[10,11] The State urges that Fulford had the capability to assist his attorney but simply refused to do so. But if this refusal was based on his paranoid delusions, it cannot be successfully urged that Fulford was actually capable of assisting counsel. A more troubling aspect of the present issue is the trial court's finding that Fulford was trying to delay the trial, and possibly obtain a severance. Given the timing of the motion, and a subsequent request by Fulford for a severance, we would uphold the trial court if it had been confronted by a barebones motion, with only the statement of Fulford's attorney as support. That is not the present case. Dr. McCray's testimony was unimpeached. His qualifications as a psychiatrist were unchallenged by the prosecution. Although his examination was brief, it was precisely because of this brevity that he suggested further evaluation was needed. On these facts, we believe that the state court committed constitutional error in not conducting further competency proceedings.

The State also insists that subsequent events confirmed that Fulford was misleading Dr. McCray. Two alibi witnesses did testify for Fulford. However, Fulford insists that he had other supportive witnesses, and that his codefendants' wives, rather than he, gave his attorneys the names of the women who testified on his behalf. Moreover, his attorneys stated that Fulford refused to assist in jury selection. We do not pass on the validity of appellant's contentions, for our plain answer is that we cannot determine from the record the extent to which Fulford took an active role in his defense.

We realize that "[t]he question [of competency] is often a difficult one in which a wide range of manifestations and subtle nuances are implicated." Drope, supra, 95 S.Ct. at 908. Because the vagaries of the human mind do not lend themselves to precise analysis, and because of the fundamental importance of ensuring that an accused be aware of and able to participate fully in his trial, procedural safeguards must be substantial barriers—not readily open to abuse or indiscretion. Under our system of laws we entrust judges and jurors, who are for the most part untrained in this area, to make ultimate determinations of competency. See White v. Estelle, 669 F.2d 973 (5th Cir.1982). It is of paramount importance—both to society and to the accused—that the fact-finding process and the determinations which evolve from that process be based upon information sufficient to permit a trier of fact reasonably to assess an accused's competency against prevailing medical and legal standards.

Because of Dr. McCray's testimony and the lack of support in the record for the reasons given by the trial judge for denying a competency hearing, we cannot, with the certitude befitting a federal court, affirm that Fulford possessed the mental competency to participate meaningfully in his[6] trial. But, see State v. Nix, 327 So.2d 301, 323-324 (La.1975). Accordingly, we remand the case to the district court for a determination of whether an adequate nunc pro tunc inquiry can be held regarding Fulford's competency in 1972. We do not define the exact contours of such an inquiry. The passage of time may make such an inquiry impossible. However, the nature of Fulford's alleged disorder and resolution of factual questions concerning his participation at trial may permit such a post hoc determination. See Lokos v. Capps, 625 F.2d 1258, 1268 at n. 5 (5th Cir.1980). We leave this determination to the district court. If it is found that a competency determination is not possible, then the State must either recharge and retry Fulford or release him from custody.

V. Pro Se Defense.

Fulford also contends that he was unconstitutionally denied the right to defend pro se, either with or without the assistance of counsel, in violation of Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 95 S.Ct. 2525, 45 L.Ed.2d 562 (1975). If our remand results in a finding that Fulford was competent during his trial, the question of his right to defend pro se will resurface. Therefore, to avoid the possibility of yet

[6] Our holding today does not divest a trial judge of his discretion to determine the competency of an accused. Nor does it suggest that medical testimony may be rebutted only by testimony similar in kind. We do hold, however, that where an accused establishes a prima facie case of incompetency, through the introduction of expert testimony, it is incumbent upon the trial court to delineate expressly his reasons for rejecting such testimony and that such rejection be supported by the record.

An examination of Faretta reveals its inapplicability to the present action. There the defendant, from the outset, refused court appointed counsel and indicated his preference to defend in proper person. The trial judge was aware of Faretta's decision several weeks before trial but nevertheless ordered him to be presented by the office of the public defender. Here, Fulford retained his own attorney and did not express his desire to defend in proper person until after the jury had been selected and sworn.

[12,13] While this circuit has not definitively ruled on the present issue, we find nothing in Faretta to suggest that the Court intended to overrule the numerous decisions holding that the trial court may properly deny a defendant's motion to defend pro se when it is not made until the day of trial. Accordingly, it is our view that once trial begins the right to defend in the proper person ceases to be absolute. At that point it lies within the trial court's discretion whether to permit the accused to proceed pro se. In reaching its decision, the trial court must balance whatever prejudice is alleged by the defense against such factors as disruption of the proceedings, inconvenience and delay, and possible confusion of the jury. Accord, Sapienza v. Vincient, 534 F.2d 1007, 1010 (2d Cir.1976); United States v. Lawrence, 605 F.2d 1321 (4th Cir. 1979). We will review such a determination only for an abuse of discretion. Id.

[14] We note that ordinarily a dialogue between the court and the defendant will help effectuate consideration of the reasons underlying an accused's request. Such a dialogue will also assist in determining the trial court's probable reasoning in the grant or denial of an accused's motion where, such as here, the court has not expressly stated its reasons. On the present facts the absence of such a dialogue is not fatal. The trial court was presented with a pro se motion made by a defendant who, the previous day, had requested a competency hearing. Since trial had commenced, the resolution of that motion was solely within the sound discretion of the trial court. We find no abuse.

Vi. Remaining Claims.

Fulford's remaining claims do not merit extensive discussion. Briefly, he asserts that he was denied both pretrial inspection of certain evidence and the right to testify. The record does not support the latter and the former has no basis in prevailing case law. See White v. Maggio, 556 F.2d 1352 (5th Cir.1977). Similarly, Fulford's allegations regarding the jury charge are not supported by the record.

For the reasons set forth above, we vacate the judgment below and remand the case to the district court for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

VACATED AND REMANDED.

District Court Memorandum Opinion

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF LOUISIANA
LAFAYETTE-OPELOUSAS DIVISION

JOHN FULFORD — SECTION D

VS. — CIVIL ACTION NO. 760748

ROSS MAGGIO, JR., WARDEN,
LOUISIANA STATE PENITENTIARY

MEMORANDUM OPINION

(Filed Oct. 29, 1980)

During the night of April 10, 1971, three armed men entered the Corso family home on the New Orleans lakefront. While the men were in the last stages of forcing open the residence's rear door, they were seen by Mrs. Corso, who ran down the hall screaming for her husband. Mr. Corso, who had been sleeping, found a .32 caliber pistol and confronted the burglars. In the ensuing gun battle, Frank Corso was mortally wounded.

Following a police investigation, John Fulford was arrested, along with James Knight, Kirksey Nix and Peter Frank Mule; all four were later indicted for murder by the Orleans Parish grand jury. Knight was granted immunity and testified against the other three defendants who were tried jointly in Lafayette after a change of venue. Nix, Mule and Fulford were found guilty without capital punishment and were sentenced to life imprisonment. On appeal, their convictions and sentences were affirmed by a unanimous court, State v. Nix, 327 So.2d 301 (La. 1975).

The petitioner now seeks a writ of habeas corpus on the basis of numerous alleged trial errors. Two grounds[1] advanced by the petitioner raise only questions of state law and its proper application, and therefore will not be considered by the court, Skipper v. Wainwright, 598 F.2d 425 (5th Cir. 1979).

The petitioner first contends that his constitutional rights were violated by the prosecution's withholding of favorable evidence despite a defense motion for its production. Specifically, the petitioner argues that a police report, police teletype message, and two confessions to the crime were not furnished to the defense, and that all four items contained sufficiently exculpatory evidence to warrant a new trial, Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L.Ed.2d 215 (1963).

Fulford agrues that his attorney could have used the information in the police report to impeach Mrs. Corso, who apparently told the officers called to the scene that only two men had broken into the house, a discrepancy with her trial testimony. However, the petitioner's assertions that the police report was withheld are belied by the record which indicates that defense counsel cross-examined officer Treadaway on the basis of information contained in the report and elicited testimony from him concerning the inconsistent versions of the crime related by the victim's wife. The petitioner's alternative claim, that two different reports are involved, is also not persuasive in light of the similarity of Officer Treadaway's testimony to the information contained in the allegedly withheld report.

The police teletype message was apparently not produced by the prosecution. The message warned law enforcement officials in neighboring states to watch for a 1965-1968 faded blue Mustang contained three men. Fulford argues that the reference to the Mustang was favorable since the prosecution was unable to connect any of the defendants with such a car. He also contends that the descriptions of two suspects in the teletype as fairly short men (5'5" and 5'9") was favorable to him since he is 6'6". However, the court's conclusion that Fulford's attorney had access to the police report forecloses any argument concerning the exculpatory nature of the blue Mustang red herring since a sighting of a similar vehicle was clearly mentioned in the report. Moreover, the petitioner's defense would not have been significantly improved by disclosure of the descriptions of two rather short suspects since a third undescribed suspect is mentioned in the teletype. Therefore, the petitioner has failed to demonstrate that the requested evidence might have altered the outcome of the trial, United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 96 S.Ct. 2392, 49 L.Ed.2d 342 (1976).

The petitioner also points to two confessions to the crime made by Donald Eugene Smith, an inmate at the federal penitentiary in Marion, Illinois. The first confession is in the form of an affidavit dated December 4, 1971, in which Smith avers that he was in the custody of Jefferson Parish officials on April 28, 1971, and that he had attempted to confess "to the armed robbery and murder that occurred April 11, 1971, at the home of the old man who was killed." Smith claims that he committed the crime with one accomplice and that the two separated after the killing. Reference is again made to "the old man in the New Orleans home robbery," but Corso is not identified by name. The second confession is more conventional, naming an accomplice and specifying the victim. Smith contends that he and one Mike Famiglitti met in New Orleans on April 10, 1971, conspired at Famiglitti's girl friend's home in gretna, and went to the Corso home the next night in a 19 67 blue Mustang. According to Smith, the object of the robbery was $24,000 in cash and five kilos of heroin hidden in Mr. Corso's bowling ball bag. This affidavit is dated June 22, 1973.

It is clear that the prosecution could not have withheld the second Smith confession since it was apparently executed some 15 months after Fulford's trial. The first confession was apparently mailed to Jefferson Parish officials, but it is unclear whether it reached the office of the Orleans officials. Even assuming that the prosecution had received this statement before trial, there is little to connect Smith's confession to the Corso killing other than the reference to the murder of an old man in a New Orleans home. Finally, it is doubtful in light of the ample evidence introduced by the state that the Smith confession contained sufficiently exculpatory evidence that its introduction by the defense would have altered the trial's outcome. For these reasons, this ground for relief lacks merit.

Fulford next contends that the jury venire was unconstitutionally selected because black people were excluded under the same selection process held to be unconstitutional in Alexander v. Louisiana, 405 U.S. 625, 92 S. Ct. 1221, 31 L.Ed.2d 536 (1972). However, the petitioner has failed to submit evidence to establish the racial composition of the petit jury venire, a threshold requirement for comparing the percentage of blacks on the venire with the percentage of blacks in the community at large. Moreover, Fulford has not demonstrated that the selection process used in 1968 when Alexander was tried was still in effect four years later. This argument therefore presents no grounds of habeas relief.

The petitioner argues that he was denied due process and the equal protection of laws because, as an indigent, he was unable to secure expert medical testimony to present when the trial court considered the appointment of a sanity commission. However, the record is clear that the petitioner retained Dr. William McCray, a qualified psychiatrist, who presented an opinion favorable to Fulford's position. Moreover, the record does not indicate the petitioner's raising the question of indigency to the court. Therefore, this contention lacks merit.

Fulford next alleges that his conviction was obtained unconstitutionally because the trial court denied a defense motion to enpanel a sanity commission. Specifically, the petitioner argues that the medical testimony of Dr. McCray was unrebutted, and that the district judge abused his discretion by refusing to establish the commission.

It is clear that due process is denied to an incompetent criminal defendant who is required to stand trial, Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 86 S.Ct. 836, 15 L.Ed.2d 815 (1966). A habeas petitioner who contends that he was entitled to a competency hearing must demonstrate that the trial court was aware of matters which raised at that time a "real, substantial and legitimate doubt as to the mental capacity of the petitioner to meaningfully participate and cooperate with counsel," Bruce v. Estelle, 483 F.2d 1031, 1043 (5th Cir. 1973); Pedrero v. Wainwright, 590 F.2d 1383 (5th Cir. 1979).

In the instant case, the petitioner offered the testimony of Dr. William McCray, a qualified psychiatrist, who examined Fulford in his cell for about 50 minutes on the day before trial. Dr. McCray noted that an evaluation usually requires several sessions as well as a supporting evaluation from a clinical psychologist. Finding Fulford to be well oriented to time, place and person, Dr. McCray nevertheless testified that Fulford had paranoid delusions which rendered him incompetent to stand trial. Specifically, Fulford had told Dr. McCray that he was withholding the names of alibi witnesses who could prove his innocence for fear that they would be arrested and prevented from testifying in his behalf.

In his per curiam giving reasons for denying the motion, the trial judge noted that Fulford "was oriented as to time, date and place and was cognizant of everything around him." He further stated that he considered the motion a subterfuge on Fulford's part to effect a severance from his codefendants. Moreovear, the judge noted that the defendant called alibi witnesses who testified in his behalf.

In light of the trial judge's opportunity to observe the petitioner at the preliminary hearings, the judge's decision to discount Dr. McCray's opinion (based as it was on limited observation) was not unreasonable. In addition, the fact that the petitioner overcame his alleged delusions of persecution and called his alibi witnesses detracts from his position that at the time of trial he was unable to assist in his defense. This ground is therefore without merit.

Fulford also contends that he was unconstitutionally denied the right to defend pro se either with or without the assistance of counsel, in violation of Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 95 S.Ct. 2525, 45 L.Ed.2d 562 (1975). However, an examination of the Faretta case reveals its inapplicability in the instant suit. In Faretta the defendant from the outset refused court appointed counsel and indicated his preference to defend in proper person. The trial judge was aware of Faretta's decision several weeks before trial but nevertheless ordered the defendant to be represented by the office of the public defender. Here, Fulford retained his own attorney and expressed his desire to defend in proper person on the date of trial, after the jury had been selected. Nothing in Faretta suggested that the Court intended to overrule the numerous decisions holding that the trial judge may properly deny a defendant's motion to defend in proper person if the motion is not made until after the trial has begun. For this reason, this argument lacks merit.

The petitioner also alleges that he is entitled to habeas relief because he was denied the effective assistance of counsel. Particularly, Fulford, alleges that the representation afforded him by Wayne Mancuso was inadequate for the following reasons: Mancuso failed to seek an evidentiary hearing on the selection process of the petit jury venire; failed to object to the illegally constituted prosecution (assistant district attorneys from Orleans Parish participated in the removed prosecution); failed to advise the court that he had less than the five years of experience statutorily required to defend a murder charge; failed to verify an order for continuance, thereby causing it to be denied; failed to advise the court that Fulford was indigent and could not obtain expert medical testimony; failed to introduce a police report to impeach Mrs. Corso; failed to press Sandra Decker, a prosecution witness, concerning discrepancies between her testimony and that of another witness about her arrival in New Orleans, and failed to ask Mrs. Corso if Ms. Decker had received a reward; failed to object to certain questions posed by the prosecutor and prejudicial statements from state witnesses; and failed to remain in the courtroom during closing argument, and thereby waived defense objections to prejudicial statements made by the prosecution in closing argument.

Several of these allegations are clearly without merit and may be disposed of summarily. For example, for counsel to have sought an evidentiary hearing on the selection process of the petit jury venire would have required anticipation of the decision in Alexander v. Louisiana, supra. Counsel's failuare to object to the allegedly improper prosecution also begs the question whether the prosecution was illegally constituted and assumes without any support that an illegally constituted prosecution per se prejudices the rights of the defendant. Fulford also points to Mancuso's failure to verify a motion for continuance, but his conclusion that this failure resulted in the motion's denial is unsupported in the record. Mancuso's failure to inform the court of Fulford's indigency and his need to secure expert medical testimony is clearly frivolous; Fulford obtained medical testimony in his favor, and there is nothing in the record which shows that the issue of indigency was ever raised by the petitioner. There is also no support in the record for Fulford's assertion that Mancuso left the courtroom during the prosecution's closing statements.

The test for determining whether a defendant was denied effective counsel depends on counsel's status as appointed or retained. If counsel was retained, his representation must be "so grossly deficient as to render the proceedings fundamentally unfair," Kallie v. Estelle, 515 F.2d 588, 591 (5th Cir. 1975); for appointed counsel, the representation must be reasonably effective, Herring v. Estelle, 491 F.2d 125 (5th Cir. 1974).

Some question exists whether Mancuso was retained or appointed counsel. Although Fulford initially retained Mancuso, Mancuso stated while pressing a motion to continue that he would withdraw if the case was not continued. At that point, Judge Schulingkamp of the Orleans Criminal District Court refused to continue the case or to let Mancuso withdraw, and told him he was appointed to the case. Because some ambiguity exists concerning Mancuso's status at the time of trial, his actions will be evaluated as though he had been appointed to represent Fulford.

Fulford alleges that Mancuso failed to inform the trial judge that he had less than five years of experience required by Article 512 of the Louisiana Code of Criminal Procedure for appointed counsel in capital cases. However, this argument appears frivolous in light of the fact that Fulford voluntarily retained Mancuso, at least at the beginning of the prosecution. Moreover, the trial judge clearly noted his surprise that Mancuso had less than the requisite five years of experience and praised the attorney's effort in representing his client. Fulford failed to show that Mancuso's lack of experience prejudiced his defense.

The record supports Fulford's allegations that Mancuso failed to introduce a police report to impeach Mrs. Corso concerning the discrepancies between her testimony and the reports and affidavits prepared by police officers following the crime. Later, when Sandra Decker stated that she arrived in New Orleans on the Thursday night before the crime, Mancuso did not point out that James Knight had testified that she arrived on the following evening. The record also supports Fulford's contention that his attorney never asked Mrs. Corso if Sandra Decker had received a reward in connection with the crime. However, these failures, considered either individually or in the aggregate, do not demonstrate that the petitioner received ineffective representation. Although Mrs. Corso's testimony at trial differed in some respects from the reports prepared by police officers, the impeachment value was certainly not great since Mrs. Corso was under stress at the time she was interrogated by the police and did not prepare or check over the reports. The discrepancy between Decker's and Knight's testimony concerning her arrival time in New Orleans is also minor. Had defense counsel pressed the point, Ms. Decker could have answered quite logically that Knight was mistaken or that his memory was faulty after a year's delay. Although Mancuso did not ask Mrs. Corso if Sandra Decker had received a reward, nothing besides the petitioner's self-serving allegations suggests that such was the case.

The record also supports the petitioner's allegations that counsel did not object to certain questions posed by the prosecutor or allegedly prejudicial statements made by prosecution witnesses. At one point, the prosecutor asked one of Fulford's alibi witnesses if she had contacted the authorities. Fulford argues that this question was objectionable under United States v. Young, 463 F.2d 934 (D. C. Cir. 1972), but a review of the Young decision reveals that the reviewing court held such questioning not to constitute reversible error. Therefore, counsel's failure to object to the question was not remiss. Fulford also argues that counsel was in error not to object when Sandra Decker stated that she had gone to Peter Mule's trailer to discuss a bank robbery. However, the petitioner fails to explain how this reference to a robbery plotted by a co-defendant prejudiced him, or why his attorney, who did not represent Mule, should have objected at this point. Decker also testified without objection that she had previously seen a silencer on Fulford's pistol, but the petitioner admits that no evidence was introduced at trial concerning a silencer in the Corso killing. Although the reference to the silencer may have been objectionable as irrelevant, the defense attorney's decision not to object did not deprive petitioner of a fair trial. For these reasons, Fulford's argument that he was denied the effective assistance of counsel are without merit.

The petitioner alleges that he was denied the right to testify in his own behalf and was denied a full and correct transcript on appeal. Both contentions are meritless. The record reflects that Fulford was told by the trial judge to sit down and be silent when he arose and attempted to take the stand either while the jury was out and counsel were arguing evidentiary points or during the state's case. The petitioner has failed to demonstrate that the trial judge ever denied him the right to testify in his own behalf when asserted at a proper time. Fulford also contends that he was denied a full transcript on appeal because the transcript did not contain his version of these events, a clearly frivolous claim. Therefore, no ground for habeas relief is presentedby these contentions.

The petitioner also advances the argument that the trial court erred by not permitting the defense an opportunity to examine the murder scene and several items of physical evidence introduced at trial. Fulford relies on White v. Maggio, 556 F.2d 1352 (5th Cir. 1977) for the proposition that fundamental fairness is denied a criminal defendant who is not afforded an opportunity to have his own expert examine critical evidence which is subject to varying expert opinion. See also Barnard v. Henderson, 514 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. 1975).

In his per curiam, the trial judge indicated that he had denied the defense motion for inspection of photographs, charts and diagrams of the Corso home on the basis of State v. Square, 257 La. 743, 244 So.2d 200 (1971). However, the court noted that the defendants were allowed to visit the scene and were therefore afforded an equivalent of the discovery they sought.

In his application, the petitioner argues that pretrial discovery should have been granted him with respect to various items found at the scene of the crime, including the alleged murder weapon, a porta power jack used to knock down the rear door of the residence, handcuffs, a police radio, cutting pliers, brief cases, a portable telephone, crowbars, screw drivers and other evidence (apparently a reference to spent casings and pellets from the murder weapon).

In White v. Maggion, supra, the Fifth Circuit determined that the defendant had been deprived of due process when he was denied the opportunity before trial to have an expert examine pellets introduced by the state and alleged to have been fired from the defendant's gun. The pellets were also the only tangible evidence connecting White to the crime. The appellate court concluded that a denial of access to evidence violates fundamental fairness if the evidence is critical to the conviction and is subject to varying expert opinion.

Under this two-prong test, it is apparent that the state's refusal to allow the defense to examine the porta power jack, police radio and other similar items did not deny Fulford due process because the items are not subject to varying expert opinion, as were the pellets in White, and in fact no experts examined the evidence for the state. Fulford's argument with respect to the casings and pellets is equally unavailing. Although the casing and pellets are obviously subject to varying expert interpretation, they do not meet the standard for critical evidence expounded in White, "evidence that, when developed by skilled counsel and experts, could induce a reasonable doubt in the minds of enough jurors to avoid a conviction." 556 F.2d 1352, 1357, 1358. In the instant case, unlike White, where only the pellets connected the defendant with the crime, ample evidence, including the testimony of accomplices, was offered to prove Fulford's involvement in the crime. For these reasons, this ground for relief is without merit.

Fulford's final ground for obtaining habeas relief concerns allegedly improper arguments made by the prosecutor during his closing argument. In the first instance, the district attorney stated that the police were concerned with catching the right man and were not fabricators or over-eager rookies who would frame someone in order to solve a case. A second instance of improper argument occurred when the prosecutor called the defense expert "Dr. Strangelove," stated that he always testified for the defense, and told the jurors to discount his testimony. Later, the prosecutor stated that in his opinion certain defense alibi witnesses were "lying in their teeth."

Although these remarks would require a reversal if they had been made in a federal prosecution, a state prosecution is to be reversed for improper argument only if the trial was thereby rendered fundamentally unfair, see Kozhovsky v. Estelle, 546 F.2d 1185 (5th Cir. 1977); Malley v. Manson, 547 F.2d 25 (2nd Cir. 1976). While it is clear that the argument was improper, it is doubtful whether the prosecutor's argument denied Fulford a fair trial in light of the strong evidence introduced against the defendants. Moreover, the fact that defense counsel did not object to any of these comments, while not dispositive, suggests that trial counsel made the tactical decision not to object and thereby emphasize the prosecutor's statements in the minds of the jurors. (Fulford argues that defense counsel left the courtroom during closing argument, but the record does not support this allegation).

Fulford also raises as improper argument the district attorney's statement that after the judge charged the jury with the applicable law, he (the judge) would see that this was not a case of manslaughter. Although the record contains this statement, it seems obvious that this odd turn of phrase was either a slip of the tongue or an error in transcription. In any case, it is difficult to see how such a statement could have prejudiced Fulford since the jury was made aware by the trial judge's charge that it was responsible for deciding whether the killing was murder or manslaughter. For these reasons, this argument advanced by the petitioner is without merit.

From this review of petitioner's allegations, it is clear that they have no merit and that a hearing to determine their validity is not required. The petition for habeas corpus is denied.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1983

ROSS MAGGIO,

Petitioner

JOHN FULFORD,

Respondent

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case below, under Case Number 80-3932, is set out in petitioner's Appendix, including the Memorandum Opinion by the Federal District Court, Number 76-0748. Additionally, the Court of Appeals granted the petitioner's motion for a stay of mandate, which order is also included in the Appendix compiled by petitioner.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Respondent incorporates petitioner's statement of the case and facts, and includes this additional relevant information. On March 1, 1982, the morning respondent's trial was to begin, counsel for respondent filed a motion to appoint a sanity commission to make a determination as to whether the respondent was competent to assist counsel in his defense. At the hearing of this motion respondent presented one witness, a psychiatrist, who had examined the respondent the previous date. The psychiatrist testified, that in his opinion, the respondent suffered from paranoid delusions which kept him from adequately assisting in his own defense. The State Trial Court denied the ensuing defense motion without hearing any evidence or rebuttal testimony to contradict the psychiatrist's opinion, nor did the Trial Judge interrogate the respondent in an attempt to personally determine respondent's mental competency to stand trial. It is this motion, the subsequent hearing and court ruling that form the core of the issue in question.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.

THE ISSUE RAISED IN PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI DOES NOT FOLLOW WITHIN THE CHARACTER OF REASON STATED IN RULE 17, NOR DOES PETITIONER PRESENT AN ISSUE OF SIGNIFICANT IMPORT OR NOVELTY TO WARRANT CONSIDERATION BY THIS COURT.

II.

A SPECIFIC FINDING OF FACT MADE BY THE STATE TRIAL COURT HAS A PRESUMPTION OF CORRECTNESS, HOWEVER, FEDERAL COURTS ON APPLICATION FOR HABEAS CORPUS HAVE AN OBLIGATION TO REEVALUATE THE STATE COURT'S FINDING, IF SUCH FINDING IS BASED ON INSUFFICIENT OR INADEQUATE EVIDENCE OR MATERIAL FACTS SURROUNDING THE ISSUE WERE NOT ADEQUATELY DEVELOPED. THE FACT THAT THE TRIAL COURT DENIED RESPONDENT'S MOTION FOR A SANITY COMMISSION WHERE PSYCHIATRIST TESTIFIED RESPONDENT WAS NOT COMPETENT TO ASSIST IN HIS DEFENSE, ABSENT ANY REBUTTAL EVIDENCE, CONSTITUTES CONVINCING EVIDENCE THAT THE FACTUAL DETERMINATION BY STATE COURT WAS ERRONEOUS.

ARGUMENT

I.

Supreme Court Rule 17 remains the primary source for guidance to lawyers in determining whether to file a Petition for Writ of Certiorari, since it states "the character of reasons which will be considered" by the Court in passing upon a Petition for Writ for Certiorari. The rule states as follows:

> ".1. A review on writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but of judicial discretion, and will be granted only when there are special and important reasons therefor. The following, while neither controlling nor fully measuring the Court's discretion, indicate the character of reasons that will be considered.
> (a) When a federal court of appeals has rendered a decision in conflict with the decision of another federal court of appeals on the same matter; or has decided a federal question in a way in conflict with a state court of last resort; or has so far departed from the accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings, or so far sanctioned such a departure by a lower court, as to call for an exercise of this Court's power of supervision.
> (b) When a state court of last resort has decided a federal question in a way in conflict with the decision of another state court of last resort or of a federal court of appeals.
> (c) When a state court or a federal court of appeals has decided an important question of federal law which has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or has decided a federal question in a way in conflict with applicable decisions of this Court...."

In the case at issue, petitioner alleges the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals erred in failing to follow the presumption of correctness of the State Court's finding of fact. By reading of Rule 17 clearly establishes the issue raised by petitioner does not fall within its specified scope. In addition, even assuming the merit of petitioner's contention, the Supreme Court's burdens and responsibilities are too great to permit it to review and correct every misstep made by the lower courts in the application of accepted principle. As stated in Ross v. Moffitt, 417 U.S. 600 (1974), "This court's decision...is discretionary and depends on numerous factors other than the perceived correctness the judgment we are asked to review." (At pages 616-17).

Stern and Gresman state, "While the perceived correctness of the decision below may affect or emphasize the appropriateness of review, undue concentration on the errors committed by the lower court could transform the Supreme Court into another tribunal of errors and appeals, contrary to its constitutional mission." R. Stern and E. Gresman, Supreme Court Practice at 298 (5th Ed. 1978).

Inasmuch as petitioners raise an issue inappropriate for this Court's review, respondent respectfully urges this Honorable Court to deny petitioner's request for writ of certiorari.

II.

28 USC §2254(d) provides that a finding of fact by the state court will be presumed correct, "unless the applicant shall establish or it shall otherwise appear...."

> "(1) That the merits of the factual dispute were not resolved in the state court hearing;
> (2) That the fact finding procedure employed by the state court was not adequate to afford a full and fair hearing;
> (3) That the material facts were not adequately developed at the state court hearing;...
> (6) That the applicant did not receive a full, fair and adequate hearing in the state court proceeding; or > (7) That the applicant was otherwise denied due process of law in the state court proceeding...."

This Honorable Court in Sumner v. Mata, 449 U.S. 539, 550 (1982), stated:

> "It is clear that in adopting the 1966 amendment, Congress in Section 2254(d) intended...to establish that the findings made by the state court system shall be presumed to be correct unless one of the seven conditions specifically set forth in Section 2254(d) was found to exist by the federal habeas court. If none of those seven conditions were found to exist, or unless the habeas court concludes that the relevant > state court determination is not 'fairly supported by the record', 'the burden shall rest upon the applicant to establish by convincing evidence that the factual determination by the state court was erroneous'." (At. page 550).

The petitioner asserts that in examining the reasons for the trial court's ruling to deny the respondent's motion for a sanity commission, the record more than fairly supports that decision. However the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has held to the contrary.

In Zapata v. Estelle, 588 F.2d 1017 (5th Cir. 1979), the court held that testimony of a medical doctor and psychiatrist that was sufficient to raise substantial doubt of the habeas corpus petitioner's competency at a trial required remand for hearing in the federal district court on the competency issue. (At page 1022).

Petitioner further contends that the trial court was not bound to agree with the examining psychiatrist's conclusions that respondent was incompetent to assist counsel in his own defense, and the decision by the trial was based entirely upon the court's actual observations of the witness.

This Court held in Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966), that while the demeanor of the defendant at trial might be relevant to the ultimate decision as to his sanity, it cannot be relied upon to dispense with a hearing on that very issue. (At page 386). The Louisiana Supreme Court has held if the issue of the accused's mental incapacity is raised by non-frivilous contentions, the trial court can satisfy itself as to whether there is reasonable ground to doubt the defendant's mental capacity to proceed by interrogating that individual. State v. Jones, 368 So.2d 1023, 1025 (La. 1979). At no time during the hearing of respondent's motion did the trial court interrogate respondent so as to enable the court to make a personal determination in regard to his competency to stand trial as required in State v. Jones, supra. (At page 1025).

At the hearing of respondent's motion for a sanity commission, counsel for respondent presented a psychiatrist who testified as follows: (State record, Volume 4, page 943).

> "As a result of - of this meeting with him, it was my preliminary opinion that the - that Mr. Fulford had paranoid delusions which kept him from adequately assisting in his own defense."

In addition to the trial court's failure to interrogate the respondent, the state did not introduce any evidence whatsoever to contradict the testimony of the psychiatrist.

At page 824, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals stated: (Fulford v. Maggio, 692 F.2d 354 (5th Cir. 1982))

> "Dr. McCray's testimony was unimpeached. His qualifications as a psychiatrist were unchallenged by the prosecution. Although his examination was brief, it was precisely because of this brevity that he suggested further evaluation was needed. On these facts, we believe that the state court committed constitutional error in not conducting further competency proceedings."

The totality of the evidence clearly supports the decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals that the state trial court committed constitutional error in not conducting further competency proceedings. Further, this case was properly reviewed in a habeas proceeding in that there was convincing evidence to support an erroneous finding of fact by the state trial court.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing arguments and jurisprudence, respondent respectfully urges this Honorable Court to deny this petition for writ of certiorari.
